The programme will engage with lecturers and students about how to challenge abusive language and actions, tackle the causes of racist violence, and promote a climate where all students feel valued, welcome and safe. The Centre supports a range of critical interventions to challenge and prevent racism in universities, including a previously launched safety audit of student spaces at 30 universities and colleges. The audit included the audit of student union spaces, and the Centre has also produced a short film to promote the research. The Centre will work with the new Centre for Equality and Diversity to strengthen our work on education law in relation to racism. The new programme is a joint project of the Centre for Human Rights and Law, the Islamophobia Reporting and Intervention Centre, the National Minority Rights Monitoring Group, the Movement for Justice, the National Campaign Against Fees and Cuts, and the Racial Identity and Community Services. It is being funded by the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. "We're proud to be working with our partners to tackle racism on British university campuses," said Eunice Yung, Director of the Centre for Human Rights and Law. "We're in the midst of a sustained wave of racist violence across the country, which has been fuelled by Brexit. The Centre and our partners will be bringing together some of the most knowledgeable anti-racist experts from across the UK to deliver training and support to UK university staff and students." Dr Joanne Shattock, Director of the Centre for Equality and Diversity, said: "This is a major step
